High Heavenly Ground

Sahalee represents the pinnacle of Northwest golf at a private club that's refined, yet friendly.

The Sahalee Country Club—located outside Seattle in Sammamish, Washington—is home to one of the world's finest golf courses. Designed by renowned golf course architect Ted Robinson with later renovations by Rees Jones, this challenging 27-hole course has hosted three major championship events since it opened in 1969.

Surrounded by towering cedars, hemlocks and Douglas firs, Sahalee is distinctively Northwest in character and appeal. Genuine and warmly welcoming, it is a club that caters to bringing members, their families and guests together in an atmosphere where gracious service and the finest amenities are fully realized.

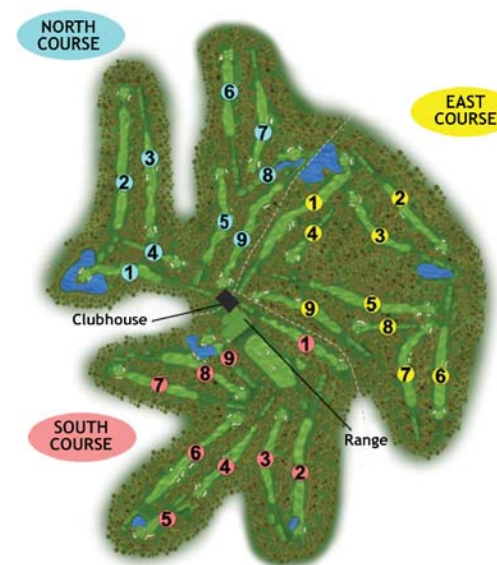

Golf at Sahalee

Ranked among Golf Digest's top 100 courses for over 30 years, Sahalee inspires both the pros and players of all abilities.

Sahalee's PGA-trained golf professionals help members take their game to the next level through individualized private instruction, golf clinics, golf camps and playing lessons. A popular golf group program provides a range of instructional, competitive and social opportunities for all ages with an especially active junior division.

Carved from the native forest, the Sahalee Country Club's year-round golf course consists of three 9-hole courses of equal caliber—any two of which can be combined for a standard 18-hole round. This arrangement eliminates the need for call-ahead starting times and promotes greater freedom of play for all members.

While some of golf's greatest have competed here in championship events, Sahalee caters to players of all ages and abilities. A wide variety of tee boxes on every hole accommodate different skill levels and afford everyone opportunities for success and continued challenge.

A Championship Tradition

Reflecting its status as the Northwest's premier golf course, Sahalee has hosted three major professional tournaments. These include the 1998 PGA Championship, the 2002 World Golf Championship NEC Invitational and the 2010 US Senior Open.

To assist golfers in honing their skills for the course, Sahalee boasts one of the region's best practice facilities with an expansive driving range, practice bunkers, pitching green and short game green.

For golfers, their families and guests, Sahalee offers the best of golf experiences in a setting that honors the grand traditions of the game.

Located at the center of the course, the beautiful 45,000 square foot Sahalee Clubhouse is the gathering place for the club's social and golf-related activities. The lower level features the Men's and Women's Lounge areas, Locker Rooms, the Golfer's Grill, Fitness Room, Swing Training Room and one of the Northwest's greatest Golf Shops.

The upper level of the facility houses the club's business offices as well as dining and entertainment spaces that provide a warm and welcoming place for members and their guests to relax. A full daily menu created by the club's award-winning Executive Chef is offered in the Rick Acton and Paul Runyan Rooms, along with a full service lounge. All rooms have access to outdoor patios with views of the towering trees and pristine fairways of Sahalee's championship course.

A Sense of Community

These special celebrations and the many other golf and social activities that fill our membership calendar help create a true sense of community at Sahalee Country Club.

From its inception, the founders of Sahalee Country Club knew what they wanted to achieve. Their vision was to create the finest golf course in the Northwest. One that would offer its members superb playing conditions and expert instruction while fostering good sportsmanship, fellowship and mutual respect.

Additionally, Sahalee was envisioned as a welcoming private environment offering impeccable service and attention to detail. At the club, opportunities for quality social and dining experiences would abound—shared by members, their families, friends and clients.

These goals, long realized, continue on as respected Sahalee traditions and values.
